THE FISH QUESTION .- The following correspandence explains itself:

ALEXANDRIA, VA., Feb. 12, 1881.

Professor S. F. Baird, Secretary Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D. C:
Sir, In our interview with you on yesterday we omitted to ask your advice as to a practice iong prevalent with the gas authorities of this city and which we think very injurious to the limitariest. The gas tar made at the works, until for use, is emptied into the river by means of a sewer. This has been the practice for thirty years and we respectfully request that you interm us whether the discharge of this gas tar term us whether the discharge of this gas tar nto the Motomac is tripurious to the fish, so that the practice may be discontinued if you so advise. We will also thanking you to send rehedule showing the production of shad in the Colomac sinca 1870

Thanking you for the information stready so courteously given, I am very respectfully, defenda junction Thomas V. Rishgir, Chairman Committee on Public Property, City course.

U.S. Commission, Fish and Fisheries, Washington, D. C., Feb. 14, 1881. Thomas V. Eisheill, Esq., Chairman Committee on Public Property, Alexandria, Va.: Unar Etc., in repiy to your letter of the 12th of Fabruary, I beg to say there is no substance by which river water is nolluted, that is considered so persicious to fish as gas tar; and I am persuaded that at least a part of the reduction in the supply of shad in the Potomac is due to this cause. I have repeatedly brought ro-cently listened shall and herring from Albe-marla Sound to Washington; and invariably, when within a few rules of Alexandria, found that the young felt stenened and many of them died, so that by the time Washington was reached, very low of them lived to carry out the intention of planting them in the Potomas, Ir

Burned to Death,

A party of ten men working in turpostine encamped in the woods at Jackson Springs, Motra e. uaty, N. C. They built an inclined shed between two large pines, and as they exprejed to be at work in this spot for some weeks they made the structure as substantial as possible, piling upon the roof layers of earth and hierry peles, and weighting it with the largest stones they could find. Monday night a severe storm prevailed, and they built a large fire in the centre of the structure. After cating their rations they spread their blankets upon the ground, and at about 11 o'clock were sleeping, huddled together around the fire, which they had replenished with fresh logs before they went to sleep. It is supposed that about an hour after midnight, when the sterm was at its height, the roof, with its mass of stores and earth, fell in on the slooping men. The floor was covered with beds of leaves and straw, and he sides were made of tral Pacific, which closed yesterday at 924. fell dry twics interlaced, and there was a barrel of turpentine in the place. These caught from the fine explanation of this decition of the fact that Secretary Schulz white heat.

The two survivers were sleeping near the door, and were both crushed by the falling mass. The first to extricate himself managed to drag himself ten feet from the ruins, and then lost consciousness. When he revived he saw streaks of flame sheeting up from the pile, and heard a voice crying, 'Help me, for God's sake! I am roasting!' One of his leg; was broken, and he had to crawl back to the ruins. He succeeded in getting the sufferer out who was more seriously injured than himself, one of his feet being burned off and his left shoulder dislocated. The two survivers were too helpless to venture near the place again. They heard agenizing shricks from two of their companions imprisoned in the burning heap of turpentine, straw, leaves in the burning heap of turpentine, straw, leaves and wood, but could render them no assistance. Half an hour afterward the fire had done its work. The blackened skeletons of six of their companions were found in one place, and in another spot two half-roasted bodies were discovered pinned to the earth by sharpened slats of pine, which had gone through their bodies.
